INTERVIEW FOLLOW-UP GUIDE

Follow up politely without over-messaging

Practical guidance • Clear steps • Honest representation

Follow-up expectations vary by employer. Use the employer's stated timeline when available and avoid repeated messages that do not add useful information.

1. Immediately after the interview

- Record the date, role, interviewer contact provided for follow-up and any promised next step.
- If appropriate, send a concise thank-you message that refers to a relevant discussion point.
- Do not send confidential interview questions or another candidate's information.

2. If you have not heard back

- Check the timeline the employer gave you and allow reasonable time for updates.
- If the stated timeline has passed, send one polite status enquiry through the appropriate channel.
- Keep the message brief and reaffirm interest without demanding an immediate decision.

3. If the timeline changes

- Respond professionally if the employer shares a delay or revised schedule.
- Continue other applications rather than treating an unconfirmed outcome as guaranteed.
- Keep your tracker updated with dates and next actions.

4. If you receive a decision

- Thank the employer for the update, regardless of the outcome.
- If rejected, you may request brief feedback where appropriate, but the employer may not provide it.
- If offered the role, review written terms and deadlines before accepting.

Key takeaways

- Respect the employer's timeline.
- Keep follow-up concise and professional.
- Continue your search until an offer is confirmed.
